A vibrant jungle scene. On the left, a large tree with a thick brown trunk and lush green, textured leaves stands prominently. In the foreground, a cluster of bright yellow sunflowers with red centers grows near the base of the tree. The ground is a lush green lawn with some small white flowers. In the background, there are more green bushes and trees under a clear blue sky with a bright yellow sun in the upper right corner, emitting white rays.

It was a bright and sunny day in the jungle, and all the friends were gathered. They were excited because today was a special day—the day of The Great Diversity Race!

As the friends talked, a friendly debate broke out. "Who do you think is the best?" they wondered. Each one had their own strengths, and they decided to settle the question with a race!

THE GREAT DIVERSITY RACE

They waited for the sun to reach high noon, the signal to start the race. The jungle was buzzing with excitement as the friends took their places at the starting line.

The race began!

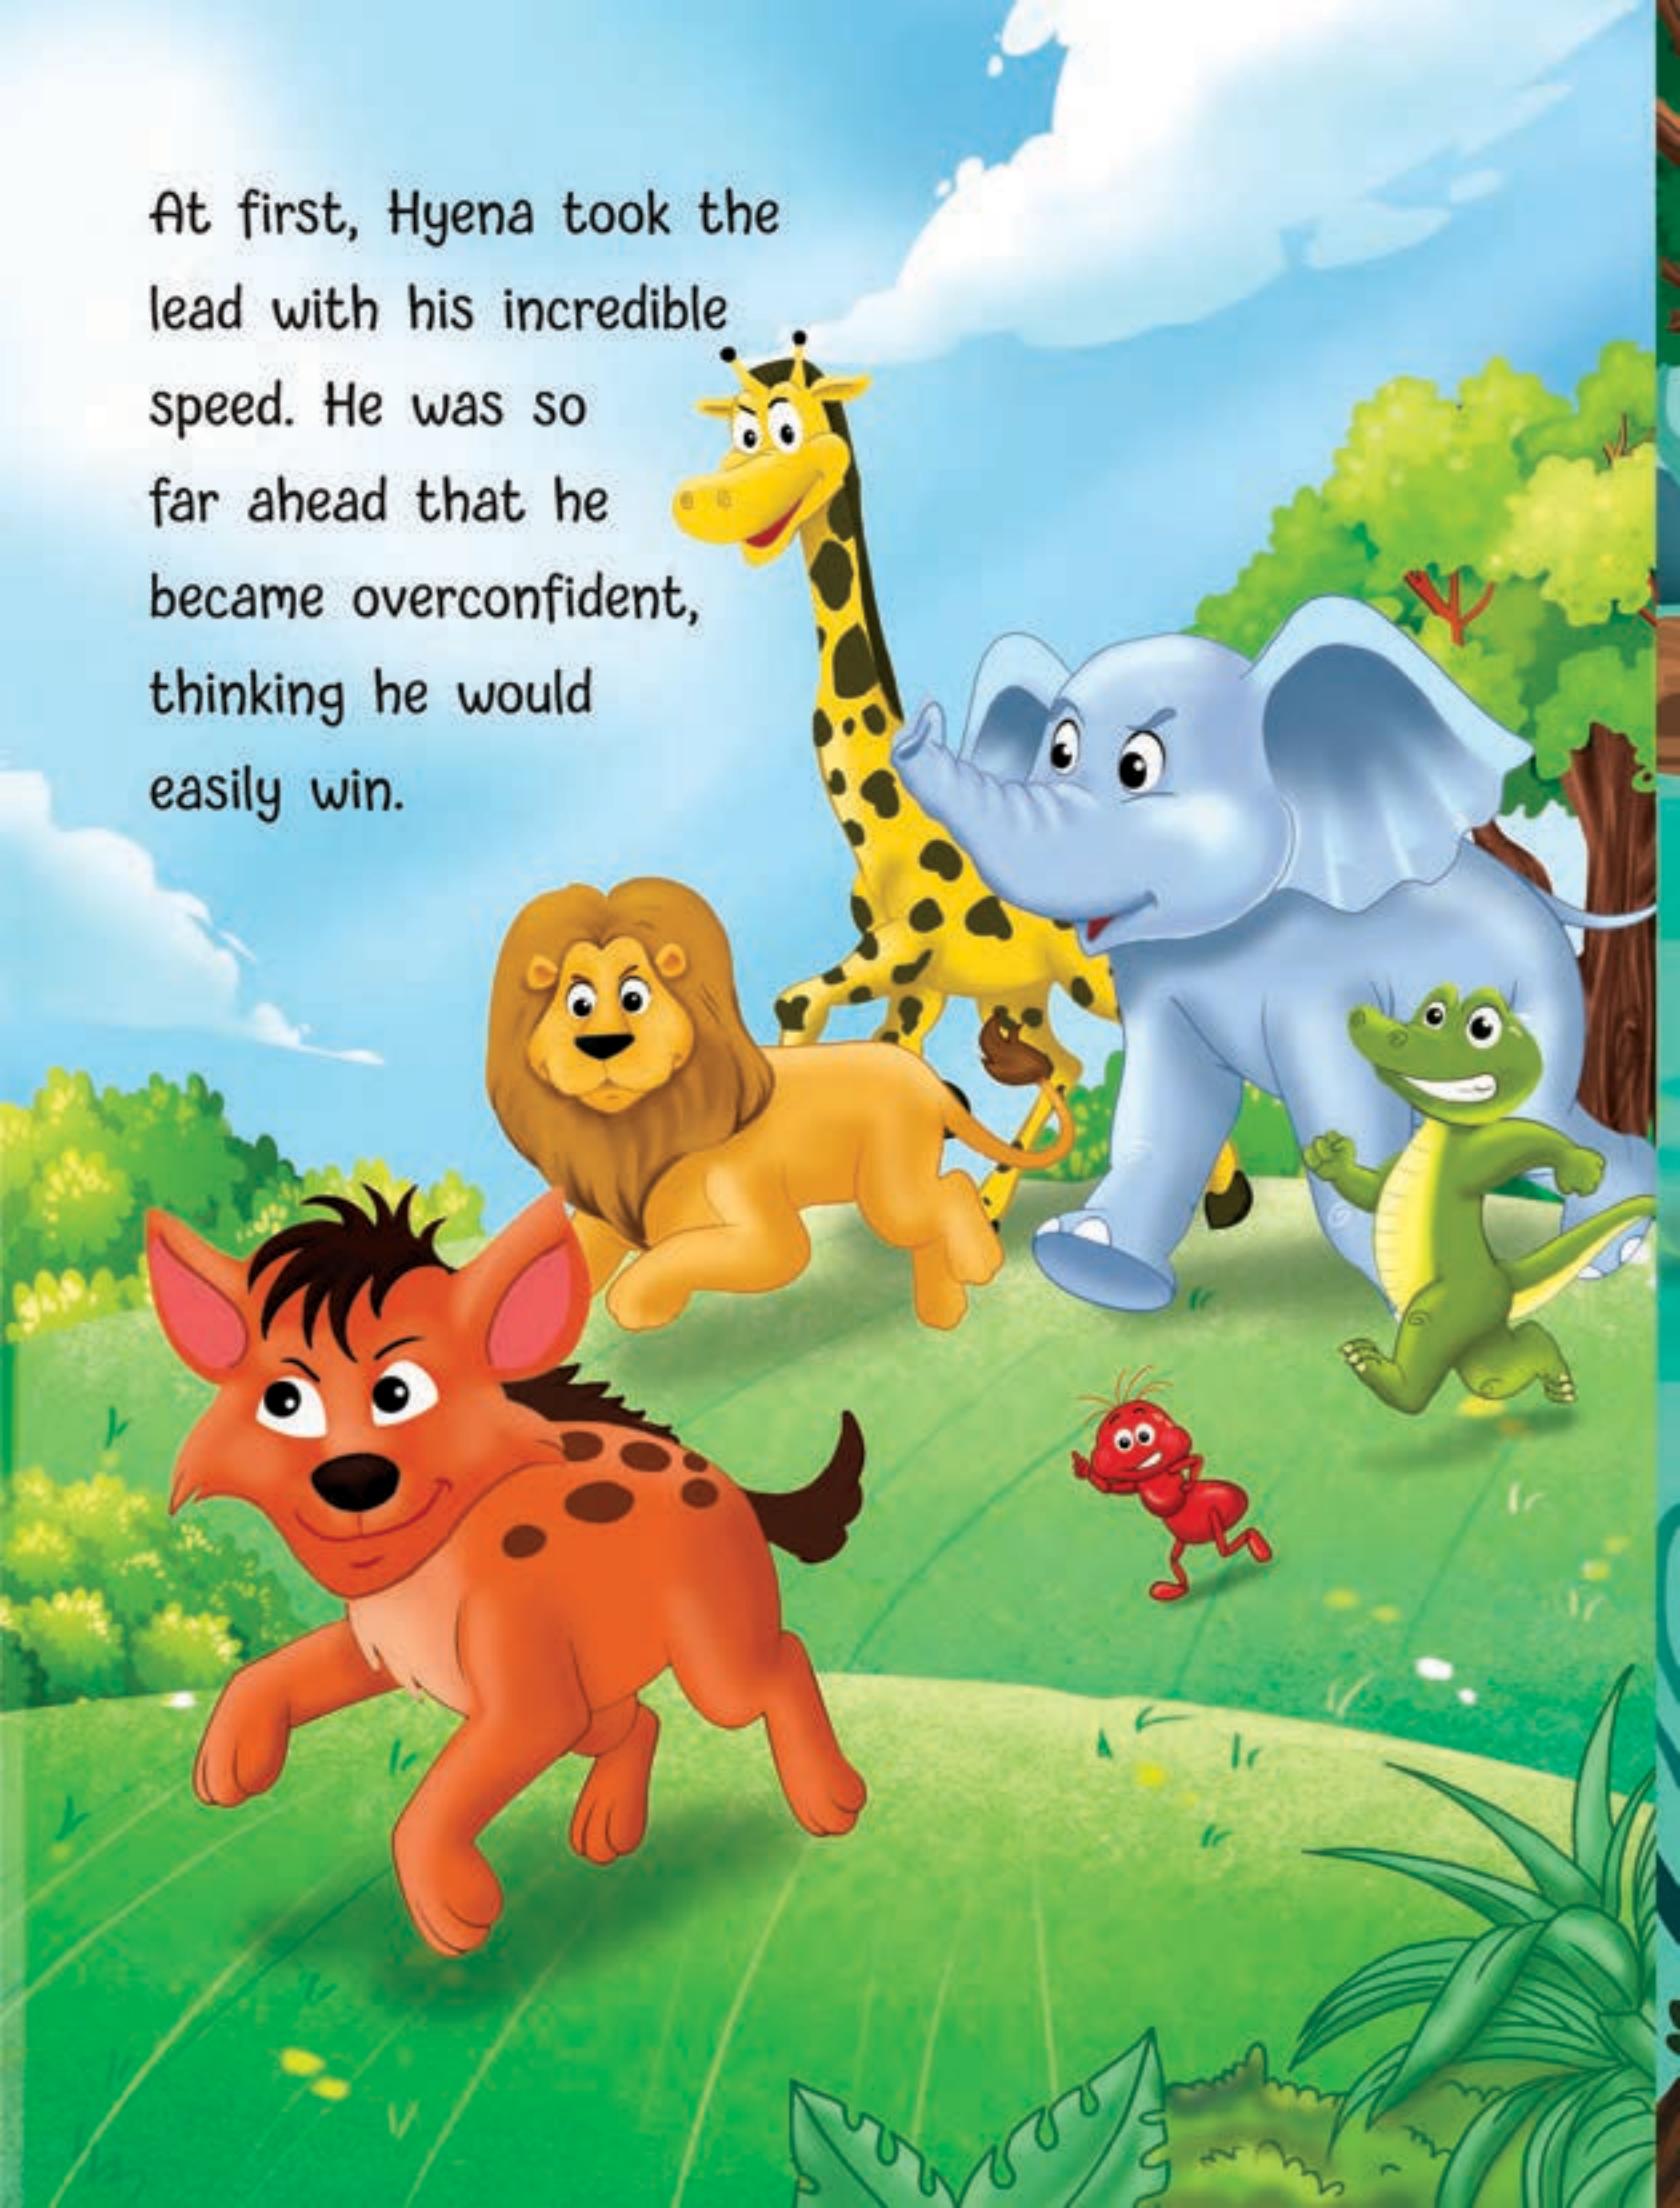

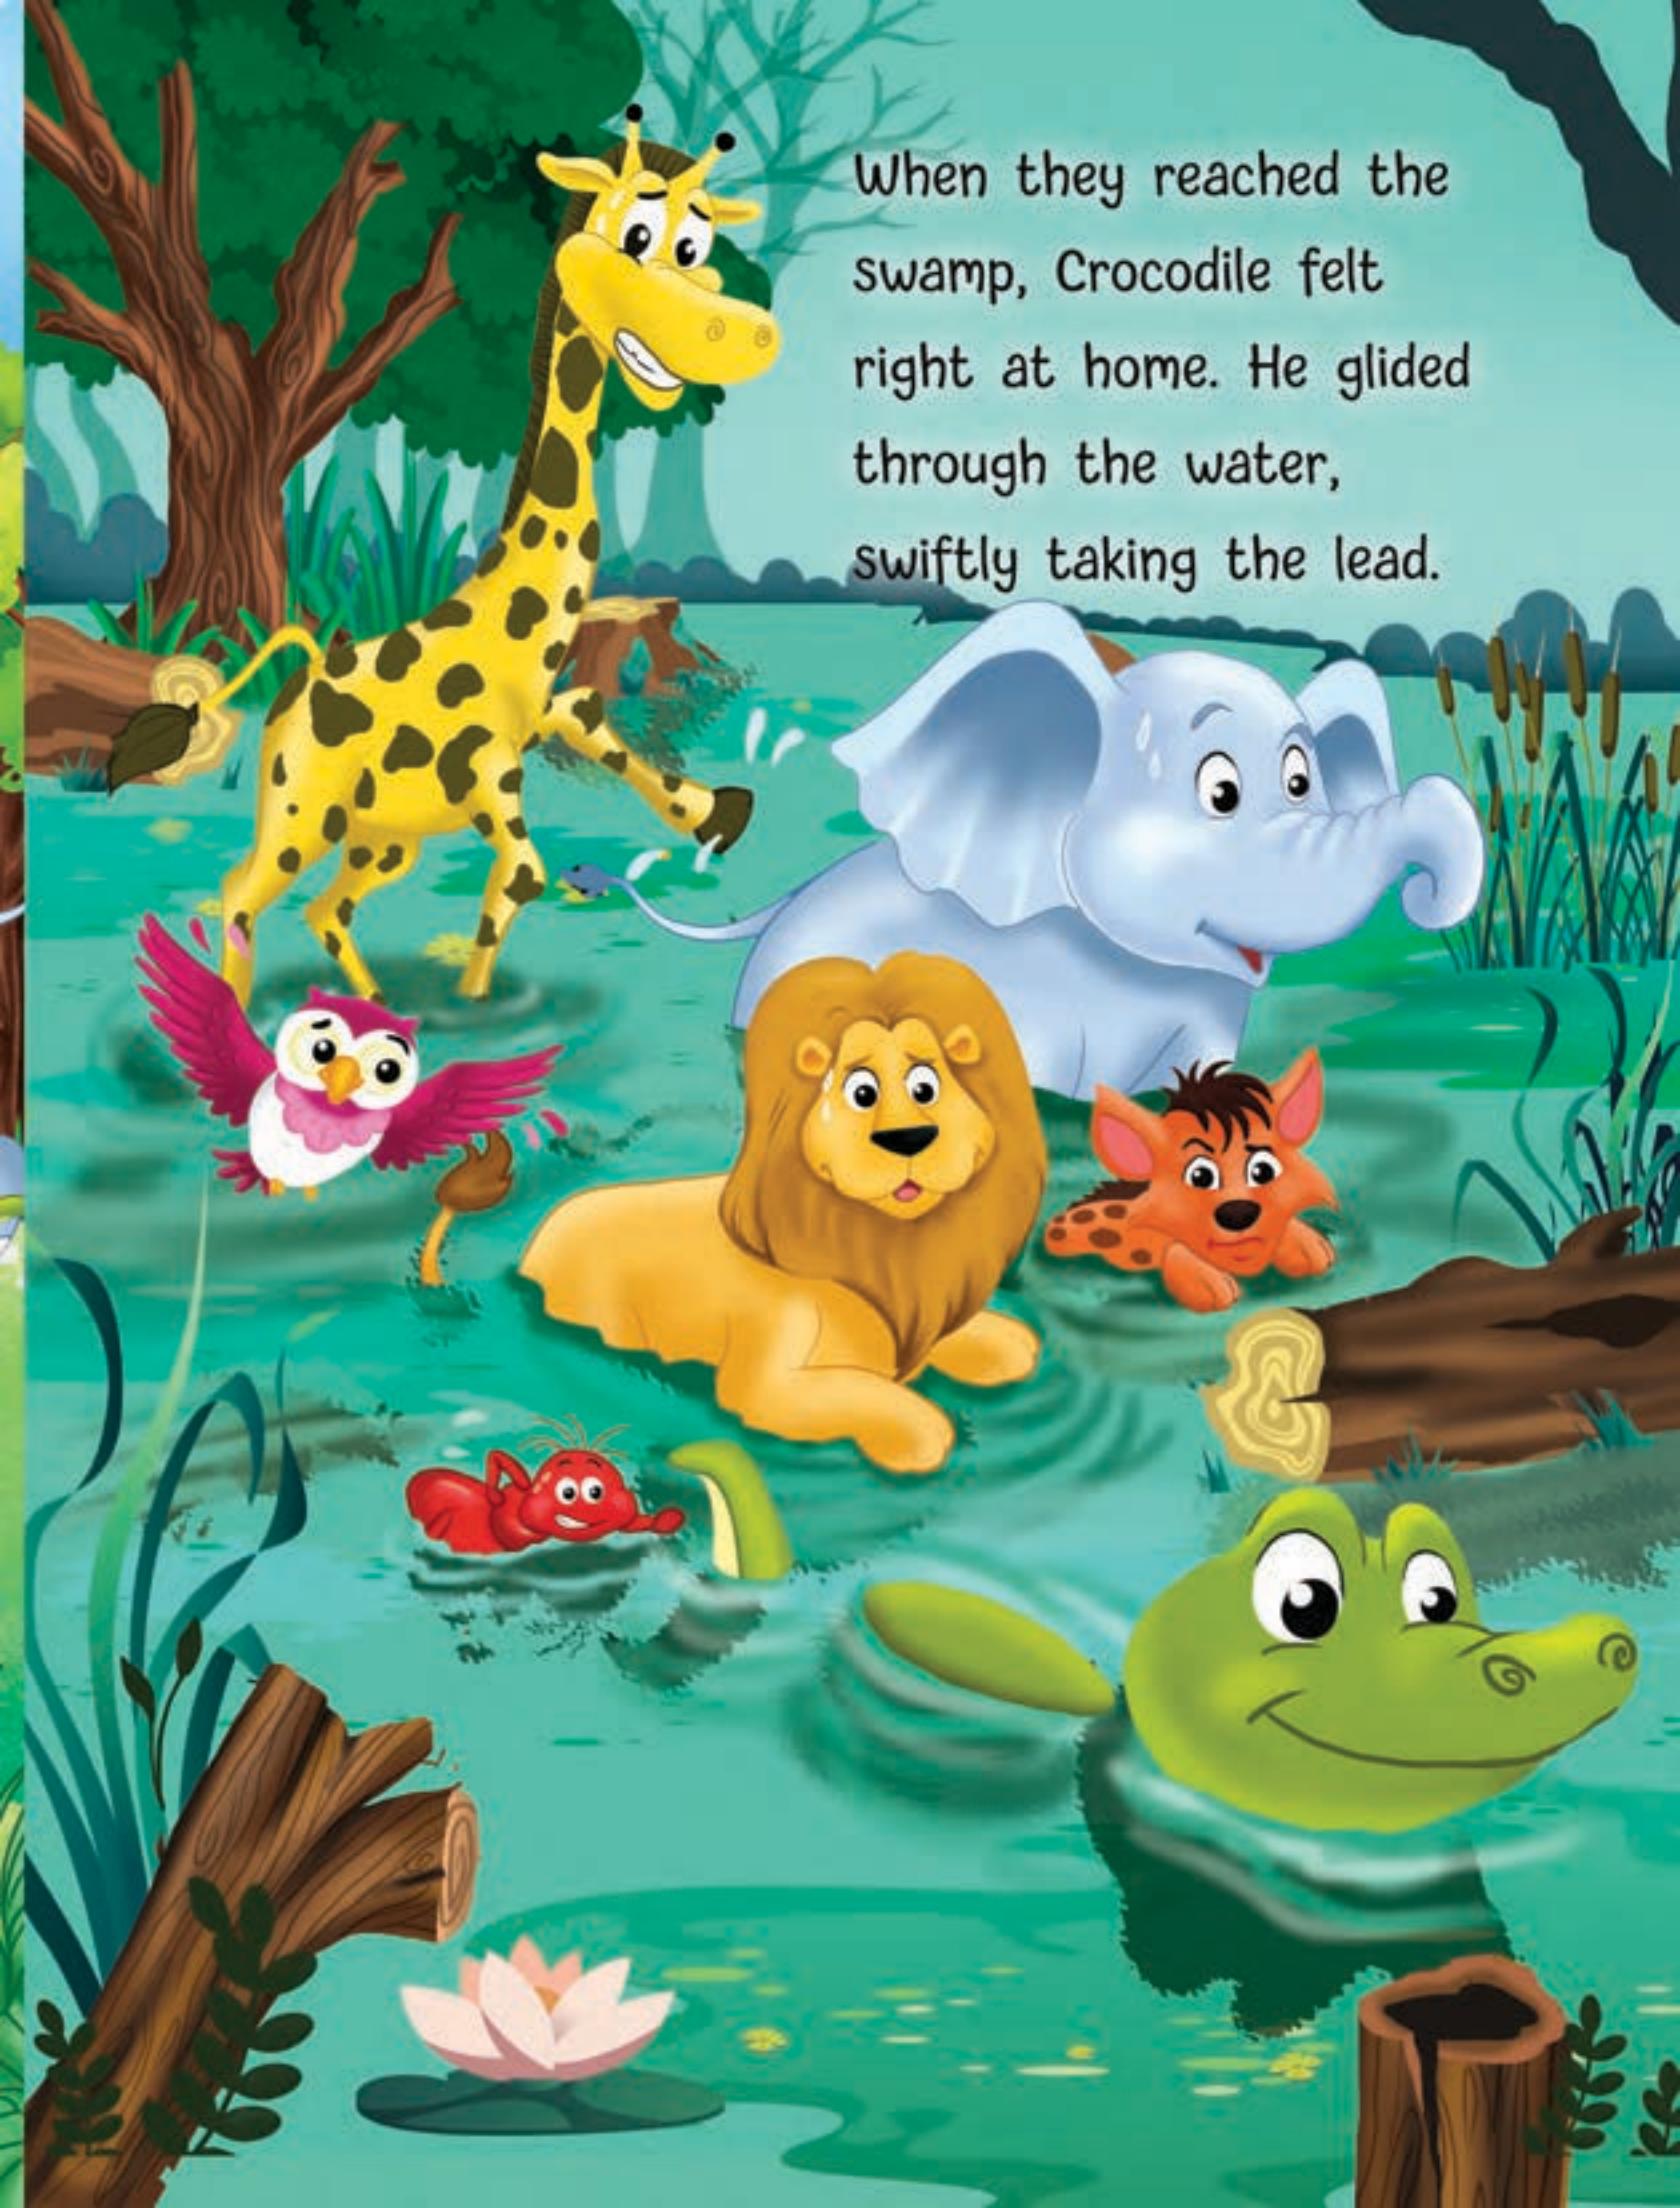

They ran through all sorts of terrains—thick forests, muddy swamps, and open plains.

It was tough, but each friend had a chance to shine.

At first, Hyena took the lead with his incredible speed. He was so far ahead that he became overconfident, thinking he would easily win.

When they reached the swamp, Crocodile felt right at home. He glided through the water, swiftly taking the lead.

And so, The Great Diversity Race became a special memory—a story about friendship, teamwork, and how our differences make us stronger together.
